Comments:	This form can be used in both formal and informal probate matters. The filing of this form by the person declining to serve will function as notice to any interested parties that the person declining will not be responsible for carrying out the duties of personal representative or testamentary trustee. This declination, if truthful, would act to protect the person declining from legal responsibility for the estate and clear the way for the appointment of an alternate personal representative or testamentary trustee. If a person has already undertaken the duties of a personal representative or testamentary trustee, this form cannot be used. Case law requires that if the person has already undertaken the duties (even if not formally appointed), the person must request the court to relieve that person of the duties of personal representative or testamentary trustee. It may be important for the court to know precisely what activities the person has engaged in as the de facto personal representative or testamentary trustee so that the estate can be protected.
